

'Our Faces Are Red,' Says Worker Editor

"Our faces are red," the editor of the Communist newspaper, The Worker, said yesterday.

The editor, Carl Winter, said there had been "an unfortunate misstatement" in a notice saying "the last issue of The Worker will be Tuesday, June 25."

✓ Yesterday's issue won't be the last, he said. The Worker won't appear next Sunday, and probably won't publish July 2 and 7 because of "technical problems" in putting out a preview edition of the long-heralded successor, Daily World, he said. But it will probably resume twice-a-week publication July 9 and for awhile thereafter.

The Worker has been printing 15,000 copies for its Tuesday and Sunday issues. The Daily World is to put out a 24-page edition dated July 4, running off 50,000 copies in daily publication has been delayed until later in July.
